ought to be warned. He'll have to keep out of sight until rain does come. Just as if he doesn't want rain as much as the rest of us do. I suppose, seeing he is my cousin, I ought to give him warning. Phew! It certainly is hot. I wish Sticky-Toes could call rain."

All that day Old Mr. Toad napped and numbled and grumbled and napped again under the board in the garden. Even there out of the sun it was ped again under the board in the garden. Even there out of the sun it was hot and he was too uncomfortable to sleep long at a time. When jolly, round, red Mr. Sun went to bed behind the Purple Hills, and as a result the air was a little cooler, Old Mr. Toad crept out from under the board. He stopped long enough to snap up a few bugs just to stay his stoffach, and then he headed for the Green Forest by way of the Old Orchard. He didn't know just where Sticky-Toes was, but you."

"The idea!" exclaimed Sticky-Toes, indignantly. "Just as if I don't want it to rain as much as any one else. Never was so uncomfortable in my life. If I could call rain I'd have done it long

"That's what I've told them, but they "That's what I've told them, but they won't listen to reason. I tell you they are all crazy," replied Old Mr. Toad.
"It's no use to argue with crazy folks. There is only one thing for you to do, and that is to keep out of sight. I guess it's a good thing that you've come up to the Old Orchard, because everybody thinks you are in the Green Forest, and they spend all their time there hunting for you. Phew! Did you ever know such dreadful weather?" Old Mr. Toad panted for breath.

"I never did," declared Sticky-Toes, making a flying leap to another branch. "I'm ever and ever so much obliged to you, cousin, for warning me. I hope it will rain before anybody discovers me."

"I hope it will," grumbled Old Mr.

It was indicated at the State Department today that objection would be made to the requirement under the contraband order that American cotton shippers assume the burden of proof that their cargoes would not eventually reach Germany and Austria, and that in amount they were not in excess of the normal copsumption of the neutral country to which they are consigned.

It was explained at the department that this same object was sought as to all classes of goods, including cotton, by the orders in council, to which the department has objected.

British Estimate of Enemy Losses Since Beginning of the War.

MORE THAN 3,000,000 MEN NOW ON BATTLE FRONTS

Conclusion Drawn That Germany Is Unable to Arm and Equip Larger Force.

LONDON, August 25.—A statement rom a British authoritative source on Germany's strength in men and her losses has been made public here. The the Germans had 1,800,000 on the westeastern front-a total of 3,200,000 men on the actual fighting line-while there also were 1,120,000 Austrians opposed to the Russians. Government Proofs.

The government brought out that Thomas Blair of Northboro, Mass., and not George Eastman, invented the first amateur camera, and that amateur photography had existed before the Eastman company existed. It was contended that the kodak company cortaining contended the state of the work of the ground of the work of the contended that the kodak company cortaining the goods of the war. Since June 30 there has been heavy fighting, probably bringing the total loss up to 2,000,000 for the year.

SMALLER COTTON RETURNS. Receipts From Exports $234,257,329

Less for Year. While American cotton exports during the fiscal year that ended June 30 decreased by only 739,003 bales, their value was $234.257,329 less than those of the preceding year, according to figures issued today by the Department of Commerce. The decrease was due those of one year ago.

Despite an increase of 27,562 bales in June exports over June, 1914, the planter received only $15,844,362, as against $18,725,444 in June last year.

Exports to Great Britain, Spain and Italy showed material increases in quantity for the year. Direct exports to Germany, Austria and Belgium were negligible, and France and Japan showed material decreases.

"All other Europe," which embraces the neutral countries except Spain, took 1,382,624 bales, valued at $60,492,-869, in the fiscal year, as against 94,896
